Press Release

Stone+tec Congress June 22 - 24: Knowledge transfer and networking for the natural stone industry

On June 22 and 23, the Stone+tec Congress at the Nuremberg Exhibition Center will provide technical information on all aspects of building with natural stone. On June 24, the congress program is entitled "Space for Mourning" in local politics and shows perspectives and opportunities for the cemetery. The congress will take place parallel to the Stone+tec trade fair for the natural stone industry (June 22-25).

Nuremberg – One focus of the Stone+tec Congress is on the topic of sustainability in the natural stone industry, which is becoming increasingly important in many areas of application. The congress program provides the latest findings, experience from working practice and information on current guidelines and specifications. The first two days of the congress (22 and 23 June) will feature specialist lectures and discussion panels aimed at architects, planners, building and environmental authorities, building trades, property developers, owners and managers of real estate and properties, gardeners and landscapers, restorers and tilers. The third day of the congress (June 24) will focus on offerings for stonemasons and cemetery managers.

In addition, the Stone+tec Congress and the associated trade fair offer the opportunity for personal exchange and in-depth discussions. Recognition as a training event has been applied for at various architectural chambers. The presentations and documents will be made available to the participants digitally afterwards. As the presentations will also be simultaneously translated into English, the congress is not only aimed at German-speaking visitors. Highlights of the program include the presentation of the German
